

Global Warming Greenies Seek to Weaken America.

Why the stated objective of the Global Warming Greenies is deceptive.

Global Warming is really all about reducing America's position and power in the world, not reducing "harmful" greenhouse gasses.

The objective of the foreign Greenies is not their stated reduction of so-called greenhouse gasses to make a better world. The real objective is the non-stated reduction of America's power and number one position in the world. In the end, global warming - climate change is not about reducing greenhouse gases, it's all about reducing America's dominant power.

It is in America's best interest to truthfully state the obvious. Since the dawn of mankind there has always been a dominant power in any group of people. Worldwide, that dominant power since the end of Second World War has been the United States of America. Indeed America has become the world's first non-territorial dominant power. With less than 5% of the world's population, America dominates the world more than any nation has ever done at any time in human history.

In a perpetually imperfect world of many nations and competing religions it is much better for Americans who are outnumbered 20 to 1 to be dominant than to be dominated by a far less benevolent power. It is also much better for the world for a free and benevolent America to be the dominant power, even though many of the world's less enlightened nation's are loath to admit it.

With the breakup of the Soviet Union and with China still shackled with communism, no country on earth can at this time overthrow America that has reached the apex of its power. America is simply too strong militarily. But America can be weakened as the terrorists attacks have shown. The American economy can also take a serious hit as was demonstrated with the self-inflicted mortgage-based scam.

It is a fact of life that when you are number one there is no place left to go but down. Everyone is gunning to replace you at the top - that's human nature. So it is especially now with America. One very effective way to weaken America is to force America to rapidly reduce emission of so-called and recently-defined "harmful" greenhouse gasses and to force America into a too rapid conversion to "greener" sources of energy.

America built its world dominance on oil. Oil still fuels America's freedom and power today. Unfortunately, it has become fashionable for American intellectuals to bad-mouth oil even while oil assures their very existence. And no one bad-mouths oil more than home-grown American Greenies who flourish comfortably under oil-fueled American military protection, with the vast majority of them not having to put their own lives on the line to insure America's freedom and power.

The Copenhagen global warming summit is a striking example of a concerted intellectual effort to weaken America. It's a forum of 192 countries where it's 191 to 1 against America. The foreign Greenies are ironically joined by their American Greenie allies in oil-bashing that doesn't make common sense. There are no speeches stating the obvious benefits that oil has brought to the world and especially to America. Instead we see a rush to green energy to combat some contrived climate change crisis.

The way of the world is that everything including the climate is always changing. New forms of energy will inevitably be developed when they are commercially viable. They will come to replace more expensive forms of older energy sources if they are cheaper and better. That's the way capitalism works. To force a change in a socialistic way doesn't make common sense in a pre-eminent capitalistic America that's number one in the world. "Cap and trade" is a socialistic governmental green Ponzi scheme that monetizes thin air in the form of greenhouses gasses to benefit the rest of the world at the expense of the United States.

What does make common sense for the best interest all Americans, including the misguided domestic Greenies, is for America to responsibly produce more American, and especially abundant Alaskan, oil to fuel America's freedom and power while the capitalistic process of constant commercial change takes place developing all other new sources of energy.

AND NOWHERE IN AMERICA DOES IT MAKE MORE COMMON SENSE TO RESPONSIBLY PRODUCE MORE OIL THAN IN ANWR'S COASTAL PLAIN ONLY A FEW DOZEN MILES FROM ONE OF THE WORLD'S LARGEST OIL PIPELINES THAT IS CURRENTLY FLOWING AT TWO-THIRDS EMPTY!

To responsibly produce more Alaskan oil from ANWR and at the same time create the world's largest National Endowment for Wildlife (NEW) that will fund wildlife and wilderness conservation long after oil is replaced by new (all puns intended) sources of energy makes common sense and is also elegant ecological environmentalism in the extreme.

The common sense bottom line for Americans is to not listen to all of the Copenhagen hot air on global warming, but rather to insist that America remain number one by producing more Alaska ANWR oil while working hard to invent new forms of energy. All common sense Americans can help me do just that by spreading the word about my U.S. Senate campaign to open ANWR during the 2010 election year.
